

To draw conclusions, we use what we know about real life and what we read to figure out more about the characters and what happens in the story.

Good readers ask themselves if their conclusions make sense.

When we draw conclusions—"We take what we know in our head and what we read."